STAINES is a union town and parish, on the east bank of the river Thames, where the Colne falls into it, and on the Great Western road, with a station on the Windsor branch of the London and South Western railway: the Great Western railway have also a branch from West Drayton, with a terminal station here, opened in September, 1885; it is 6 miles south-east from Windsor, 9 south from Uxbridge and 19 from London by rail, 16½ by road, in the Uxbridge division of the county, Spelthorne hundred and petty sessional division, Chertsey county court district, rural deanery of Hampton, archdeaconry of Middlesex and diocese of London. The distance from Staines bridge to London Bridge by land is 20 miles, and owing to the circuitous course of the Thames 34 by water. A stone bridge of three arches, erected in 1832, at a cost of about £70,000, and opened by William IV. and Queen Adelaide, connects Staines with Egham.

Staines being a lordship of the Crown is not incorporated; it was formerly governed by a Local Board, formed in 1872, but under the provisions of the "Local Government Act, 1894" (56 and 57 Vict. c. 73), is now controlled by an Urban District Council; it is within the jurisdiction of the Metropolitan Police. By Local Government Board Order No. 30,502, which came into operation April 1, 1896, the Urban District and civil parish of Staines were extended to include part of the civil parish of Stanwell. The town and neighbourhood is supplied with water, derived from the chalk, by the South-West Suburban Water Company, formed in the year 1883, the works being at Egham, and is lighted with gas by a company formed in 1871. Two new storage reservoirs (situated in Stanwell parish) in connection with the London Water Supply were completed in 1903 by the Staines Reservoir Joint Committee, at a cost of one million pounds, and are now under the control of the Metropolitan Water Board. The reservoirs have a depth of 30 feet, and a holding capacity of 3,300 million gallons. The pumping station is at Staines. Staines is said to derive its name from the boundary stone, dated 1285, standing in a meadow above the bridge, and marking the ancient jurisdiction of the City of London over the western portion of the river Thames. This memorial was repaired in 1781, during the mayoralty of Sir Watkin Lewis kt. and placed on a pedestal raised on three steps: the pedestal bears the names of various Lord Mayors who have visited the spot.

The church of St. Mary the Virgin, which occupies the site of the ancient church, built in 675, was erected (with the exception of the tower) in 1828, and is an edifice of brick with York stone dressings, in a debased Gothic style, consisting of apsidal chancel, nave, south porch and an embattled western tower of brick, with crocketed pinnacles, containing a clock and 8 bells; the tower was built by Inigo Jones in 1631 and
